He also indicated that despite the outstanding level of development in ISESCO's performance of its civilizational mission thanks to the wise policy of its Director General, the Member States' commitment to pay their contributions regularly had become a pressing necessity.

He further pointed out that the current session of the General Conference was held at a critical juncture in the history of the Muslim world, emphasizing that the Conference would accordingly adopt the three-year plan and budget for the years 2001-2003 and the Medium-Term Plan for the years 2001-2009, which were designed to usher ISESCO into the twenty-first century, the century of great challenges. He explained that the formidable challenge faced by the Muslim World at that stage was to consolidate the joint Islamic action organs on the forefront of which was the Islamic Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization, the important and powerful tool for the comprehensive civilizational renaissance of the Muslim Ummah.

of aggression that threatened its sanctities in Al Quds Al Sharif in particular, and in Palestine in general, which made it necessary for the Muslim world to be equipped with science and knowledge. He then pointed out that, being fully aware of its huge responsibilities at that critical juncture, the Islamic Organization spared no effort to promote the new civilizational cycle of the Muslim Ummah and endeavoured relentlessly to build for the future in the short and medium term guided by two action plans: the three-year action plan for the years 2001-2003 and the Medium-Term plan for the years 2001-2009.

He indicated that the draft three-year action plan (2001-2003) dealt with issues of education, science, culture and communication from an all-embracing perspective receptive to the deep changes and rapid technological developments on the international scene, within a framework that sought to revive the authentic values through a civilizational pattern that met the spiritual, material and social needs of the individual and linked life with the aims and purposes of the Righteous Religion of Islam.

He expressed thanks and appreciation to H.E. Dr. Khalid Ibn Mohammed Al-Ankary, Minister of higher Education in the Kingdom of Saudi Arabia, for the valuable services he had rendered to the Organization during his presidency of the sixth Session of the General Conference to strengthen its presence on the Islamic and international arena.
